

MICHAEL D. YOUNG

BOOK #4 IN THE CHESS QUEST SERIES

IN THIS GAME, TRUST IS THE DEADLIEST MOVE.

BISHOP:

BETRAYAL

FOR ONE THIRTEEN-YEAR-OLD BOY,
CHECKMATE IS ALWAYS A MOVE AWAY...

Chapter 1: An Ominous Message

Rich could tell from the second the messenger burst into the room that it wasn't going to be good news. The young man's face looked sickly and pale, the veins on the skin standing out like somebody had painted them on the surface.

All the knights at the table rose from their chairs and turned in the messenger's direction. He coughed hard, clutching his hand to his chest before giving his message. "The Corridor," he began. "It's changing. A large section of it broke off and shattered as I watched, and a new section formed. It's all . . ." The man staggered, and a few of the knights steadied him. ". . . gray."

"Get this man a room and call the healers!" Minerva commanded.

The messenger shook his head. "No, I have more to say. He wanted me to tell you that the rules have changed. They are no longer going to sit by and lean on their swords. They will now take up arms and resist any who oppose them."

Something about the messenger's words seemed familiar to Rich, but he couldn't quite place why. "Who do you mean by 'he'?" he asked.

"The Gray Knight," the messenger said. "All the Gigantaurs follow him. It is his fortress now."

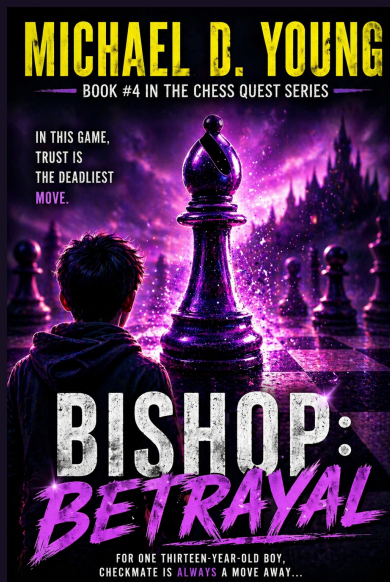

The man gasped for breath, his eyes rolling darting back and forth. "He says," whispered the messenger. "He says that the world will not be consumed by light or darkness. Everything will end in ... gray."

The man collapsed, and as though he had been a glass sculpture, he broke into millions of pieces.

THE NEXT MOVE IS YOURS

End of Sample

The Gray Knight has made his move. The Corridor is changing, the rules are changing, and the next threat refuses to choose between light and darkness.
